Boundaries, But Make It Cute

Boundaries aren't about being mean — they're about being clear. The hardest part is finding the words in the moment, so here they are, ready to go. Practice saying them out loud. Save the ones you need most. And remember: a boundary without enforcement is just a suggestion.

Saying No

the word is a full sentence

- The simple no: "I can't do that, but thank you for thinking of me."
- No with a door closed: "That doesn't work for me. I hope you find what you need."
- No to the guilt trip: "I understand you're disappointed, and my answer is still no."
- The delay (buy yourself time): "Let me check and get back to you." (Then decide on YOUR terms.)

With Family

love them. still hold the line.

The topic shutdown: "I'm not discussing that anymore. Let's talk about something else."

The visit boundary: "We'd love to see you Saturday from 2 to 4. We'll need to wrap up then."

The advice deflector: "I appreciate you caring. I've got this handled."

When they bring up the past: "I've moved past that, and I'd like our conversations to reflect that."

At Work

professional doesn't mean doormat

The workload pushback: "I can take this on if we push back the X deadline — which should I prioritize?"

The after-hours text: "I'll look at this first thing in the morning." (Then put the phone down.)

The credit claim: "Thanks — actually, that was my work on that project. Happy to walk you through it."

The meeting overload: "I won't be able to make that one — please send me the notes."

With Friends

real friends respect the line

The plan decline: "I need a quiet night in, but have so much fun! Let's catch up next week."

The venting limit: "I love you and I only have about 10 minutes of advice-brain left today."

The money ask: "I'm not able to lend money, but I can help you brainstorm other options."

The last-minute favor: "I can't swing that today. I need more notice for favors like that."

When They Push Back

they will test it. hold it anyway.

The repeat: "I hear you. My answer hasn't changed." (Say it the same way, every time.)

The guilt: "I'm not responsible for managing your disappointment about my boundary."

The escalation: "If you keep pushing, I'm going to end this conversation." (Then do it.)

The aftermath pep talk: "Holding that boundary was hard AND it was right. I'm proud of me."
